It replaces the entire server with a new one that he can have overwrite the old one with. When he goes back to the server, it will be reloaded fresh from the new change. His server update runs from his domain name and it would not have to be a common place. You also mentioned that it takes a min of 10 mins to reload the server. He can be watching a movie or sleeping. The server does not have to be online and it can be on the back end of the world and not be affected. It is just a matter of keeping his copy update each time a new version comes out. The only reason I would suggest to him changing his domain name would be if he wanted to upgrade it and make it his own for other things then a social gaming website. I believe the entire request was a misunderstanding and I was not giving him any sort of tutorial. As I mentioned in the other questions, if the visitor is focused on one website, it is a matter of renting time in a regular hosting service. He can also choose to make use of a VPS that is like a regular hosting service where the server is a virtual server. Even if the code is present, he can easily make use of the same tools and utilities to make it work or not. If it is a real issue he can write a script to run and watch his site and make use of the cloud to have a program change his current server's content if need be. A: You can not, simply put. Your hosting provider is hosted at another IP The firewall on that IP may block you

In your Firebase project, open the project's properties Scroll down to Advanced settings Uncheck the checkbox "Disable App Engine app creation for this project" Once this is done, your project should be able to receive the notifications for all platforms, including Firebase. Narendra Modi may have helped several companies in Gujarat get clean chits, but the Model Code of Conduct is a dangerous step that will introduce arbitrary rule to a state which has a history of dispensing justice within the constitution, irrespective of how corrupt one has been. But what is more alarming is that the rise in 'Gujarat Model' of corruption would also ensure that the gap between the rich and the poor becomes wider. Let's look at some of the examples. Sinking Steel Scam The Narendra Modi government in Gujarat has cleared several entities accused of being the beneficiaries of an illegal land grab. One of the companies that has been cleared is Rithala based Awasi India which was booked for the misappropriation of a land measuring around 16,000 square metres in Patan. The alleged land grab took place in 2001 when the current state government was headed
